(PRWEB) March 13, 2003 -- A group of Midwest investors will contract to buy your car for $10,000, but only if it's been destroyed by a nuclear or atomic blast.

The idea evolved after auto insurance companies began informing policyholders their cars were not covered from loss due to a nuclear or radioactive blast.

"The company's name 'Nuked Autos' is an intentional satire of those insurance companies' actions," says John Thomas, spokesman for the company. "Our contracts to buy people's destroyed cars are genuine, but our real hope is no one ever has a reason to complete the sale."

The contracted purchase also includes the exclusive rights for Nuked Autos to document the car owner's life and vehicle prior, during and after the nuclear event. The group plans to use their personal accounts and cars to create touring exhibits against nuclear weapons.

"There's nothing like seeing the harshness of reality firsthand to move people," according to Thomas. "When people see the destruction to the cars up close while listening to audio accounts of the day, we hope they'll become more emotionally and personally involved in the efforts to ban nuclear threat everywhere in the world."

Nuked Autos has limited funding so they are initially only offering to contract with a small number of car owners per U.S. city. You can get complete contract information and check on contract availability in your city by visiting their web site at www.nukedautos.com
