

Drunk Driving: Second Time Offender Beats Conviction

Two-time offender escapes DWI (also known as DUI) conviction thanks to a slip in the law. Even though his blood alcohol test was well over the legal limit, this driver beat the system.

Lamar, CO (PRWEB) January 1, 2006 -- Two-time offender escapes DWI (also known as DUI) conviction due to a slip in the law. Even though his blood alcohol test was well over the legal limit, this driver beat the system.

Lamar, Colorado - December 2005 - The police pulled him over on a snowy night because they suspected he'd been drinking. This Colorado man, with a BAC (blood alcohol content) far exceeding the legal limit took his case to court and won because the law allowed him to.

Says this anonymous driver, "The very moment I was pulled over, I did everything right. I didn't argue. I was polite. The officer was shocked how cooperative I was despite the high amount of alcohol in my system."

The driver later recalled hearing about the officer speaking with the District Attorney about the case citing, "Looks like I have good, solid case." It wasn't until the hearing was over did the police officer learn he lost the case against the driver. "

The driver and his attorney discovered a critical point in their case that made it possible to beat a DUI (also known as DWI depending on the state or residence).

How this anonymous driver beat his case is posted on a new, free website called DUI Problems Relief.org. The actual web address is: www.duiproblemsrelief.org.

www.duiproblemsrelief.org was created to help those who are facing DWI and DUI charges and are in need of answers and relief. The site is completely free to use and shows those who are facing a drunk driving charge how to minimize the damage to their record and in some cases beat a possible conviction.
