

TRUCKER GETS NOVEL PUBLISHED.

An over the road trucker gets novel "The Concrete Cowboy" published.

(PRWEB) January 4, 2002 -- An Interstate trucker, Stephan R Hutchinson, with thirty years of driving the highways and byways of our country under his belt, has written a very interesting novel "The Concrete Cowboy" isbn# 1-58851-365-3 about a young man who buys a big rig and goes out over the road to make a living without first properly investigating the trucking industry. He jumps in with both feet and its "Full Speed Ahead" and "Hell Bent For Leather" as this rather flamboyant and somewhat impetuous individual encounters the perils of being out there on his own as an interstate trucker. AmErica House Publishing - P.O. Box 151 - Fredrick - Maryland 21705 - 1-877-333-7422 - discovered this amusing author and decided to publish his novel. He has three other novels ready for publication but this publisher does not print a mass-market size, which the distributors want so it will fit their racks in the truck stop stores. He also has three screenplays based on the novels he has written. He told me that it was quite a thrill to see it listed on Barnes and Noble's website index of books. He also has a very interesting website "truckerforpresident" where not only can his book be ordered directly from the publisher, but his amusing articles that he had in a trucking magazine for a five month run can be read. Only in America, folks! Only in America!
