Fair Lawn, New Jersey (PRWEB) March 10, 2016 -- Companies in the logistics and transportation industry have been victimized by employee theft as well as professional crime rings that hijack trucks and break into distribution centers. Losses exceed well over $20 billion each year and tend to escalate during a recessionary economy.

"While most executives understand the importance of protecting their businesses, they don't always know the most effective ways to do so," explains Barry Brandman. "I'll be discussing tried and proven solutions that have been very successful for other companies in this industry. As an organization that has been investigating business crime for over 40 years, we have an in-depth understanding of the devious methods being used to commit these crimes."
