

DieselGuard.com is set to dominate market place.

Voice Express Corporation Agrees to Full Collaboration with UK internet based invention company.

(PRWEB) February 12, 2004 --Geoffrey Stern, President of Voice Express commented: "Dieselguard.com and Voice Express have teamed up to create an innovative product which uses our audio electronics to enhance the lives of millions of motorists. The Dieselguard audio warning device represents the perfect combination of our audio chip technology with a product application which incorporates an understanding of the needs and lifestyle of customers on the go."

Fuelguard's Director Christopher Bibby said: "The Dieselguard will prevent mis fuelling occurrences when fitted to a vehicle.

One of my main concerns about mis-fueling a vehicle was the fact that an individual might inadvertently put petrol in their diesel car, not realising they had done so.

If this person then drove their vehicle on a busy motorway, it is quite possible that there might be a sudden loss of power and or engine failure. Such could well result in their vehicle being the cause of a serious road accident, and loss of life. UK motorways are dangerous enough. Any device that reduces the risk of motorway accidents can only be a good thing.

My company has a series of motoring inventions yet to be produced."

Mr Bibby went on to say: "If dieselguard proves a success I would be happy to donate a small percentage of the profits to charity. I would invite any charity interested in receiving such to get in touch via the web site; dieselguard.com. The first 10 to get in touch will be placed on such list".
