

Auto Accident Lawyer David Perecman Comments on Staten Island Expressway Eleven-Car Accident

New York auto accident lawyer David Perecman of The Perecman Firm comments on an eleven-car accident on the Staten Island Expressway.

New York, New York (PRWEB) January 07, 2014 -- An eleven-car accident closed a section of the Staten Island Expressway and left one person injured. The accident was being blamed on the weather, said NBC News (1.5.14). The weather is a common factor contributing to many traffic crashes, said David Perecman, founder of The Perecman Firm.

Freezing rain and sleet had pelted the area before the accident. The weather conditions had "left roads across the tri-state dangerously icy" reported NBC News. Slippery roads make it more difficult for most vehicles to stay on the road, to stop, or to avoid hitting other vehicles.

"Surprising to many, extreme weather will almost never be a valid excuse for causing an accident," said Perecman. "Drivers are expected to use extreme caution in conditions caused by bad weather conditions."

Nearly 8% of crashes in New York in 2011 occurred because the pavement was slippery, according to the 2012 Statewide Statistical Summary from the New York State Department of Motor Vehicles.

Proof for figuring out who was at fault in a multi-car accident will come from a number of sources, including police reports, witness statements and physical evidence. Some cases also require in-depth investigation and accident reconstruction. Oftentimes, working out who was at fault and the degree of responsibility of each motorist takes time. An experienced auto accident layer may help victims speed up the time it takes to get compensated for their lost wages, medical bills and pain resulting from a car accident.
