AMS informs public about preventive vehicle maintenance

(PRWEB) February 26, 2004 --Automotive Maintenance Solutions (AMS) is informing the public about the cost of not performing preventive maintenance on their vehicles. The new franchise that has its roots in a small town is telling the public that they can save more money by performing the preventive maintenance on their vehicles.

"The major problems that AMS finds could have been prevented with proper maintenance" says Rick Sheldrick. The problem is that the vehicles of today are so much computer controlled that with out proper maintenance, one problem will become a very costly problem in a short amount of time. Just a couple years ago the vehicle was alot simpler, but with the computer the vehicle will change if there is a problem so that it will work with little differance in performance. And this is the problem, first is that the owner does not know the problem is there, then the owner drives the vehicle until the check engine light come on or the vehicle breaks down. The Sheldrick's have started the AMS franchise to fill the void of 70 billion in unperformed vehicle maintenance, and with over 40 years in the automotive service industry

AMS has a great automotive maintenance business. "We at AMS want all of our franchisees to be successful and if you own one or hundred AMS will make you a part of our family" says Paul Sheldrick President of AMS. 90% of all vehicles that drive on the roads every day need some type of preventive maintenance. The other thing that AMS has brought to the public attention is the warranty on their vehicle, if the vehicle does not have the proper maintenance as in the owners manual then the warranty will be voided. And with fuel prices going up daily, the preventive vehicle maintenancewill save by giving better fuel mileage plus cut the cost of major repairs and break downs.
