

We will be politically incorrect in questioning high gas prices - so you don't have to.

You shouldn't complain about high gas prices or anything else for that matter, if you don't know what your Congressperson is up to joinfoil.org will help find out for you. Too many Congresspersons who are supposedly representing the people, do not because no one really bothers to question their voting record and whereabouts. Don't be too surprised to find that your Congressperson has become rich, powerful and seemingly unbeatable; unaccountable to nobody but themselves and the special interests that back them. Here and now you can find it out once and for all.

(PRWEB) June 3, 2004 -- You shouldn't complain about high gas prices or anything else for that matter, if you don't know what your Congressperson is up to. For a measly $2.87 contribution, you can put elected politicians where the need to be. In the hot seat.

We'll FAX your congresspersons a tough inquiry without your name on it and get you answers to some of your nagging questions.

Visit www.joinfoil.org to download a copy of the Inquiry questions you will surely want answered.

If we receive an answer, we'll forward it to you. Congresspersons will never know it was you that sent it. If we don't get a response within 30 days, we'll let you know that, too.

So, release that fire and brimstone. Don't worry about spilling merlot on your ascot. Or a beer on your new Harley T-shirt.

Get in touch with FOIL and we'll do the dirty work. We'll be the politically incorrect people who put politicians' feet to the fire and demand answers to questions they've been avoiding for years that has you paying high gas prices.

Over the years by becoming politically correct too many average Americans lost interest in who's really running America. Political correctness may help you succeed in cocktail and country club circles. But that's it.

But in the real world, political correctness is simply an impotent response to a planet gone mad.

It's not politically correct to question big oil companies, car manufacturers and do-nothing politicians that are content with the status quo when it comes to our energy policies. Just the opposite.

Patriotic Americans with brains and opinions need to do otherwise and protest. Replace "political correctness" with being "patriotically correct."

It may be this simple, in America today, people have gotten used to being disappointed. They look at inept politicians, the screwing by special interest groups and just wring their hands. They look at self-serving government and wish it were different. They pay high premiums for a health care system more intent on making people sick than healthy and they lament an educational system that churns out graduates who are barely able to read and write.

And they still pump $2-plus-a-gallon gasoline into their cars, oblivious to the men and women dying on the deserts of Iraq in a blood-for-oil conflict that's barely raised an eyebrow among anesthetized American citizens.

So what has political correctness gained for our nation? Apathy, impotence and a sense of bitter frustration.

If you want to fight back, then join the FOIL ranks. Your message will get out and your anonymity will be safe.

FOIL is stoking the fire of political incorrectness so you won't have soil yourself in the pit of realityspeak.

To date, FOIL has been a solitary, but powerful voice. With billboards, posters, bumper stickers, decals, newspaper ads and Internet stories, it has brought to the public's attention many times America's need to cut the pipeline to foreign oil.

But what has happened? Washington politicians, automobile manufacturers, oil companies and energy-based nonprofit organizations are still reluctant to market or support alternative energy with the same competitive ferocity they display to market cars, Hummers and SUVs?

FOIL is looking to partner with millions of civic-minded Americans to push for a voice in getting greater use of the alternative energies that will snap America's dependence on foreign oil.

America needs gutsy provocative people to get the word out and the job done.

And if that job requires rankling the politically correct, then FOIL is there to make sure you are heard.

If there was ever the right time for the average person to step forward --- it's now.

P.S. If you like, download the necessary "Inquiry" from www.joinfoil.org home page and send it on your own.

FOIL has been using one creative campaign after another to get across the idea that energy other than what's generated by petro-fuels is needed to get America off its foreign oil diet and to return sanity, safety and homeland security to the USA.
