

Trademark Lawsuit Dismissed Against Cofbel Corporation

Los Angeles federal court throws out trademark lawsuit on the eve of trial.

Los Angeles (PRWEB) August 16, 2004 -- On July 31, 2004, United States District Court Judge Wm. Matthew Bryne, Jr. granted a motion for summary judgment filed by Cofbel Corporation in a trademark dispute lawsuit filed by Cyclone USA. Trial in the case, Cyclone USA, Inc. v. LL&C, LLC, et al. (Case No. CV 03 992 WMB), against the remaining defendants is currently scheduled for August 2004 in Los Angeles.

Cyclone USA, former distributor of the Tornado $\hat{A}\Box$ an air flow system for internal combustion engines $\hat{A}\Box$ alleged that Cofbel, in addition to the original inventor and current distributor of the Tornado, violated Cyclone USA $\hat{A}\Box$ s trademark and trade names. In his written decision, Judge Byrne dismissed all remaining claims in the suit based on the fact that Cyclone $\hat{A}\Box$ s failed to show any conspiracy attributable to Cofbel, or any damages caused by CofbelÂ□s conduct. Previously, October 6, 2003, the Court dismissed all of CycloneÂ□s intellectual property and unfair competition claims Cyclone alleged against Cofbel. In that decision, Judge Byrne recognized that trademark and unfair competition claims require $\hat{A} \square$ actual use $\hat{A} \square$ as opposed to $\hat{A} \square$ intent to use. $\hat{A} \square$ The remaining four claims were dismissed today.
$\hat{A} \square$ We are pleased that Judge Byrne saw this suit against Cofbel for what it was $\hat{A} \square$ baseless, $\hat{A} \square$ said Anthony Luti of the Luti Law Firm, the Hollywood based litigation boutique that represented Cofbel. Â Cofbel is thankful that it has been vindicated in light of these spurious allegations. Finally, the company can put this lawsuit behind it.Â□
