

Book Explores How People Avoid DUIs-- Wildseed Books Announces Release of First Book, Drinking, Driving, and Surviving

Wildseed Books announces its first release, "Drinking, Driving, and Surviving. The book explores the measures some motorists are attempting to lower their odds of getting a DUI.

ORLANDO, FL (PRWEB) August 19, 2004 -- Every year millions of motorists are pulled over and flagged down at roadside stops for police checking for drunk drivers. For about 1.5 million of these motorists, driving will never be the same—they will remain stuck with the mantle of a drunk driver, and forced to pay the price in the form of jail time, thousands of dollars of fines and increased insurance costs.

Now, self-proclaimed gonzo journalist Parnell Worthington is the only man brave enough—or blitzed enough—to expose America's last taboo: drunk driving.

In his Wildseed Books release, Drinking, Driving and Surviving: Uncovering the secrets of DUI avoidance, Worthington unleashes his twisted investigative prowess on how people avoid DUIs. Based on the insights of a group Worthington calls "the masters" and full of their amusing stories from "the field," the book is a collection of strategies and tactics that this group claims has helped them avoid DUIs.

Worthington said he began his investigation based on his observations that some drinkers at his favorite bars have never received a DUI, while others attract them like iron shavings on a magnet.

"Despite the fact that the blood alcohol concentration to receive a DUI has been lowered to such a level that you can get busted for sucking on a cough drop, not everyone is scared about getting a DUI," Worthington said. "In fact, I have interviewed numerous 'masters' who tell me they believe they've uncovered strategies to lower the risk of a DUI arrest."

Worthington explained the book is not a "how-to" book, nor is it a preachy morality tale.

"Of course I'm not advocating in any way to drive while impaired, but I also try not to be judgmental," Worthington said. "After all, we're discussing gay marriage and global jihad, but we're afraid to say we've had a beer at a barbeque and drove home."
