

Little Known Public Car Auction Information

"Can the common man get access to public car auction resources not openly available to the public?"

(PRWEB) October 12, 2004 -- "Yes he can!" This is possible because there are sources online that have access to public car auction information that the general public does not know about.

One such source is that of Cheap Car Finder. Cheap Car Finder has been serving 150,000 satisfied members for over 4 years and is a brainchild of Airon Corporation - a leader in online innovation services.

This situation arises because every day thousands of Americans default on their car loans or lease payments, resulting in the repossession of their new or almost new cars by their financial institutions. The cost of storing the cars outweighs the banks' ability to reclaim the lost money and these cars are auctioned off as fast as possible. On the testimonial page of the Cheap Car Finder site customers have reported a total savings of 75.76% on the actual book value of the cars they purchased.

The typical traditional auctions are not complicated. You would arrive at your local-area repossessed car auction early in the morning and inspect the cars on the lot that are for sale. Many cars start from as low as $100. and if the attendance on the day is limited, due to the many sources that exists, there may be instances where there are few bidders and you would be able to get the car you located for a low amount when bidding starts later in the day.

For people who do not like traditional auctions where you bid on location there is also online access to vehicle listings to give you the ability to bid and buy online. This means that instead of going to the dealer or classified ads, members of Cheap Car Finder have access to direct sources where they can find these cars with up to 90% savings off the book value.

In the case of warranty, the sources would typically offer a 3 month warranty or guarantee free of charge. This information is not advertised to the general public because it is a very protected source of revenue for the majority of car dealerships.
