

Atlas Quest Introduces New Letterboxing Trip Planner

Need to break up the mandatory road trips to visit family for the holiday season? Then letterbox along the way with help from the trip planner at Atlas Quest, the revolutionary new letterboxing tool allowing letterboxers to search for letterbox clues along major routes throughout the United States

(PRWEB) December 2, 2004 -- The new Atlas Quest trip planner supports more than 30,000 miles of the Interstate Highway System across 48 states in addition to other notable routes such as the Appalachian Trail and Route 66. "We're always looking for new ways to help letterboxers sort through the thousands of clues available," says Ryan Carpenter, the founder and principle designer of Atlas Quest. "Previous search technologies lacked the ability to list clues along stretches of major roads and interstates. We wanted to fix that problem, and we did."

Upon learning about the new trip planner, a letterboxer from Georgia using the trail name Amyrica, remarked, "I put in a lot of work this week plotting our trip and potential letterboxes. The trip planner will save me lots of time in the future."

Mr. Carpenter agreed, and continued by saying, "This new trip planner will save time for letterboxers everywhere. Letterboxing is a fast-growing and evolving hobby, and Atlas Quest and the new trip planner is here to help users keep up with all these changes."

Letterboxing started 150 years ago in a remote part of Dartmoor in southwestern England, evolving into a treasure hunt type game with often cryptic clues leading to letterboxes planted in special and unusual places. The hobby crossed the Atlantic in April of 1998 to the shores of America where letterboxing exploded in popularity with over 10,000 letterboxes now planted in the United States and a growing number showing up in countries around the world.

Atlas Quest, launched in June of 2004 to help sort through the bewildering number of letterbox clues, has become a leading provider of advanced letterbox searches. With thousands of letterbox clues listed and supporting countries from Albania to Zimbabwe, Atlas Quest has established itself as a leading letterbox authority.
