(PRWEB) April 17, 2005 -- Some people dream of doing. Some people just do it. Yvonne Matthys and her husband Georges are the doing kind. After all, they've lived their entire life that way - as emigrants from Belgium to Canada in the early '50s, as tobacco farmers, as real-estate agents, and as loving parents.

Now they're in their 70s and the adventures continue. Yvonne's new book, Day By Day, is an illustrated account of the couple's 21,000-kilometre dream trip from London, Ontario, through the U.S. west and north into Alaska and Canada's Northwest Territories. This is a book that caters to the wanderlust in all of us. The freedom to just pack up and go. The sheer delight in seeing things you've never seen before, meeting new friends, and creating new memories.

And beyond all of that, it's also a great guide book. Those with the urge to travel by car into the U.S. west and north to Alaska will find plenty here to help them plan a trip all their own.

Getting there is just half the fun. Reading Day By Day can be the other half.
