Ponte Vedra Beach, Florida (PRWEB) June 21, 2005 -- Inventor Frank Miller has patented a new environmentally safe, non-solvent metal cleaner that is revolutionizing car care across the globe by eliminating the dirt and sludge responsible for 95percent of engine problems.

The human story behind Auto-Rx is as dramatic as the results now being achieved by the amazing new product.

A diagnosis of Stage 4 prostate cancer six years ago gave Miller the resolve and determination to leave something of value behind him -- a viable product that would clean metal and not poison the environment.

An application engineer who worked in the printing industry for over thirty years, Miller discovered that nearly all of his fellow in-plant technicians had been diagnosed with the same cancer. Â It was the petroleum-based solvents used to clean printing presses that did it,Â declares Miller. Â We were knee-deep in them eight hours per day, five days per week. Solvents are in the air we breathe. They do not disappear. When they drift from the printing plant or through the emissions from your car, they get into your skin and pores. Like the sludge that builds up in your engine and eventually kills it, solvents are killing people like me.Â

Physically weak, financially strapped, and fighting to stay alive, Miller spent every waking moment at his computer, searching the world-wide web for the newest non-solvent, non-petroleum chemical technology. Â I finally found Natralube 1006, a natural occurring ester chemical formula developed by the Fanning Corporation. With that formula as a base, we developed the Â pourabilityÂ that would make the product viable.Â

After successfully doing independent field and emissions tests, receiving U.S. Application Patent #6,544,349 for the product which he named Auto-RX, Miller arranged with Haviland Consumer Products in Grand Rapids, Mich., to produce and bottle it, set up his Web site and began marketing it over the Internet.
