(PRWEB) July 5, 2005 -- With the popularity of performance products on the rise, manufacturers are raising their buy-in prices for distributors making it virtually impossible for smaller companies to enter the market. Enter Dynamic Motorsports (www.dynamicmotorsports.com), here to help the "smaller" companies.

High performance automotive parts are gaining recognition everyday. Many enthusiasts dream of making the jump from their hobby to an actual business or career. Everything is set in place; the company has a name, the funding is in order, the website made, and now it's all smooth sailing right? To many new start ups finding the hard way, the answer is wrong. Soon they find out that they have to buy-in to become a distributor for certain manufacturers. This is a big problem for start up companies indeed, as prices will significantly add up. Most small companies, especially start-ups, do not have the funding to carry many product lines if they have to pay the sometimes substantially large buy-ins.

Is there hope for the small company? Think Dynamic Motorsports (www.dynamicmotorsports.com) and the answer is yes! "We're happy to support our distributors. We purposely set our distribution requirements in favor of the distributor for a reason. We don't believe in them having to pay large buy-ins or maintain a certain amount of sales a year", says Eric Cuaresma President of Dynamic Motorsports (www.dynamicmotorsports.com). "We have worked on developing some of the best requirements to become a distributor so that everyone wins".

Companies like Dynamic Motorsports (www.dynamicmotorsports.com) are around to not only help enthusiasts get what they need, but to also help other companies make a profit with performance parts. What was once thought of as a very difficult market to get into now has an open door for small companies and start ups to walk through. Now the dreams of many can be fulfilled, or at least given a great foundation in starting their new company.
