

NMEDA Announces Danny Langfield As New CEO

The National Mobility Equipment Dealers Association (NMEDA) has announced Danny Langfield as the new Chief Executive Officer

Tampa, FL (PRWEB) March 20, 2017 -- The National Mobility Equipment Dealers Association (NMEDA) has announced Danny Langfield as the new Chief Executive Officer. After a thorough and comprehensive search, Langfield succeeded the current CEO, David Hubbard, on December 1, 2016. "I am thankful and honored to have been chosen for the opportunity to represent and lead this extraordinary organization of devoted and talented professionals," said Langfield.

Langfield brings many years of executive leadership and industry experience with non-profit organization management, starting in 1999 with the Association of Texas Professional Educators (ATPE). Since 2006, he has served as the Deputy Executive Director for the Texas Independent Automobile Dealers Association (TIADA) where he was primarily responsible for advocacy, government relations, education and compliance.

In his new role as CEO, Langfield represents and supports Quality Assurance Program (QAP) mobility dealers, manufactures, driver rehabilitation specialists, and professionals who provide accessible transportation solutions for people with disabilities. With his notable range of business experience and years of dedicated industry involvement, Danny Langfield makes an exemplary fit for NMEDA.
