

Girls Just Wanna Have Fun! (Or Get Killed)

BookSurge proudly announces the publication of Driving Down the 101 by Jawa and Dana.

Kuwait City, Kuwait (PRWEB) December 8, 2005 -- BookSurge announces the publication of Driving Down the 101 by Jawa and Dana.

Kuwaiti teenagers and sisters, Lora and Dana, are accompanied by their cousin, Jenna, in a series of exciting, and sometimes harrowing, adventures. Without their parents' knowledge, the girls sneak off to the island of Cyprus. What started out as a search for the ultimate "soul-mate" ended in a series of "unfortunate events" (not the Lemony Snicket's kind) but unfortunate nonetheless.

This delightful novel of (mis)adventure was written by Jawa and Dana, two Kuwaiti teenage cousins, who spent a summer in Cyprus; a visit that eventually spawned Driving Down the 101. In their novel, the young heroines are assisted by Pedro, a Mexican exiled from his country (by his own mother) that drives a taxi and seems more intent on eating kebabs and killing fellow drivers. They are also followed (editor's mistake, we meant stalked) by Dora, another Kuwaiti teenager who is as narcissistic as she is endearing. When the girls pick up a holy monk named Moody-Na-Na, in the seafood section at the local supermarket, they are oblivious to his secretly malicious intentions.

For three girls far from home and family, Driving Down the 101 proves to be nearly as exciting as it is dangerous!
