Dallas, TX (PRWEB) January 4, 2006 -- BioPerformance introduces gas pill that user say increases gas savings.

Have you ever wondered why the internal combustion engine has remained basically unchanged since the first Model T rolled off the assembly line in 1908?

"If GM kept up with technology like the computer industry has, we would all be driving $25 cars that got 1000 MPG." --Bill Gates

Since the early days of the industrial revolution, technology has taken us from the golden age to the space age. We only need to compare our old computer to new models to see how quickly things change for the better. Since this is true, how is it possible that the first Model T averaged 17 miles per gallon and the gas mileage of new Ford Explorers is exactly the same. What's wrong with this picture?

BioPerformance has asked itself the same question. They just released a product December 8, 2005, to people all over the USA that has incredible fuel saving power. The product called "BioPerformance Fuel" is produced in pill or powder form. When inserted into your gas tank prior to your regular gas fill up, users boast an increase in gas savings of up to 25% or more. Numerous testimonials can be read on the company website www.smartpill2.mybpbiz.com.

This revolutionary breakthrough product can also decrease harmful emissions thereby improving your local air quality. Along with offering significant gas savings, BioPerformance also offers a networking opportunity to earn income by sharing their revolutionary gas pill with others.
