

Love, Loss and Drug Addiction – Mark Morey Launches a New Novel About a Two Time Champion and Winner of the First Formula One Race

A fictionalised account of one of the most successful sportsmen of all time, who led an uncompromising life of incredible highs and lows. Set in the 1930s on the eve of World War Two, this is an incredible story of an incredible man in an incredible time.

Canberra, Australia (PRWEB UK) 5 July 2016 -- Author Mark Morey tells the story of Achille Varzi: one of the most successful sportsman of the 1930s; hero to his followers; worshipped by the women in his life; driven to succeed. A passionate affair, unbearable humiliation after one of his greatest victories, and nearly being killed in a freak accident all lead to a terrible drug addiction. Varzi was lucky to survive; eventually being rescued by his family and by his ever faithful Norma. Told partly through the eyes of Varzi and partly by fictional Italian-Australian journalist Paul Bassi, readers follow the many triumphs and tragedies of Varzi's life: his downfall when at the height of his success during the golden era of motor racing, his recovery, his marriage, and his return to racing once more, winning the first-ever Formula One race.

The Last Great Race is a fictionalised account of a real-life story that seems too incredible to be true, only it is.
