RVShark's collection of unvarnished RV park reviews has swelled to cover 26 U.S. states, making <http://www.rvshark.com> a free, trustworthy online guidebook.

(PRWEB) January 10, 2003 -- PALO ALTO, CALIF. (January 10, 2003) RVShark's collection of unvarnished RV park reviews has swelled to cover 26 U.S. states, serving RVer's throughout North America with a free, trustworthy online guidebook.

RVShark's reviews are based on comments submitted by real RVer's. RVShark takes pains to assess incoming comments for candor and accuracy. As a result, the RVShark website, at <http://www.rvshark.com>, has become famous for its honest, useful RV park reviews.

And RVShark publishes some doozies. Writing about an RV park in Alabama, one RVer reported that the manger almost seems to work at being rude and uncooperative. Another RVer, after a stay at a Florida facility, damned its campground membership program as dangerous and misleading.

Of course, RVShark also publishes praise. A recent comment from a guest at a Texas RV park read, management is friendly, the property is clean, and access is great.

RVShark's maverick approach to reviews has earned it recognition from a wide range of media outlets, from the Dallas Morning News to Woodall's Campground Management. The real estate industry has also picked up on RVShark, since its RV parks for sale section has become a popular marketplace for property opportunities.

About RVShark

RVShark, the online recreational vehicle publication, features raw reviews of RV parks based on real RVer's experiences. A commercial member of the Family Motor Coach Association, RVShark also includes RV for sale and RV park for sale sections. RVShark is available free of charge on the Internet at <http://www.rvshark.com>. RVShark is owned by SharkPage, Inc., a privately held corporation based in Palo Alto, California.
