

Arizona DUI Lawyers at Corso Law Group Expect More Alcohol-Related Arrests During Back to School

Phoenix residents can expect increased alcohol-related arrests as college students return to school, according to the experienced Phoenix DUI lawyers at Corso Law Group.

Phoenix, Arizona (PRWEB) August 31, 2016 -- Phoenix residents can expect increased alcohol-related arrests as college students return to school, according to experienced Phoenix DUI lawyers at Corso Law Group.

Last year, law enforcement made more than 1,360 alcohol-arrests. This happened over the first three weekends of the ASU school year, according to Phoenix New Times.

“These arrests have life-changing effects,” said Christopher Corso, founder of Corso Law Group. “Students need to understand their rights.”

Drinking and driving is a concern as classes start again. One in five college students drink and then drive, according to published studies.

“Having an arrest on your record as a college student can affect your life,” Corso said. “Many companies won’t hire you if you have a DUI or a criminal arrest record.”

DUI penalties in Phoenix are harsh. A Phoenix DUI can result in expensive fines and license suspension. A Phoenix DUI can also result in alcohol classes and jail time.
